Press release

For immediate release!

PIEK has been licensed to provide the IPC/WHMA-A-620 Training and Certification Programme in Europe

The IPC/WHMA-A-620 standard regarding Requirements and Acceptance for Cable and Wire Harness Assemblies, is modelled after IPC-A-610, which is one of IPC's most widely used standards and holds an international reputation as THE source for end product acceptance criteria for consumer and high reliability printed circuit board assemblies.

In addition the IPC/WHMA-A-620 is the first industry consensus standard for cable and wire harness fabrication and installation. Classes of products are defined and include criteria for Target, Acceptable, Process Indicator and Defect conditions to support the collection of visual quality acceptability requirements for each class. These criteria are supported by 500 full-colour illustrations.

PIEK International Education Centre in Heerlen, The Netherlands, offering a wide range of training courses to its clients in the electronics manufacturing industry, is now licensed to conduct Application Specialist training to companies all around the globe.

"We are very pleased with this A-620 license. Numerous well known European companies have already shown their interest in this training class and we are proud to be one of few global IPC Certified Training Institutes that are licensed to conduct these programmes" says Rob Walls, Managing Director of PIEK. This training can also be performed in the English, German and Dutch language. All training materials and exams are translated in the mentioned languages.
